The Federal Communications Commission RE: Docket 04-435
445 12th Street, SW
Washington, DC 20554

Dear FCC Commissioners ,

Recently I learned that there a moves to relax the regulations regarding use of cell phones on airplanes. I understand that the study of the full impact of cell phone usage on planes is not yet complete. I believe that it is irresponsible for law makers and those involved in such a potential change to consider this until, at least, the study is complete. Even then I am not sure that it is a wise move to take compromise travelers and flight attendants safety by adding loud cell phone conversations to cramped seating, crying children, passengers who have consumed too much alochol and the nervous air traveler. I suspect that this might not be too big a problem for our lawmakers that flyer first class but for the average working class person cell phone usage may just push some passengers over the edge.

There is no hard evidence that cell phone use doesn't interfere with navigational instruments. The introduction of cell phone use in the cabin will not only increase tension among passengers, it will compromise flight attendants' ability to maintain order in an emergency. Cell phone use could also enable terrorists to coordinate a plan of action more effectively.

Please leave the current rules in effect.

Sincerely, Lillian Covarrubias
